I noticed a rice sack in the corner next to some herbal medicine and folded clothes.

"Why are you packing, Mother?"

Without answering me, she led me to the stool and raked her hard-toothed comb through my hair. As each stroke yanked at my scalp, pain shot through my mosquito (13) chewed body. I clenched my teeth, not wanting to cry out. Then, I felt something cold on my scalp. "I hope this works," Mother whispered (14) as claimed on the bottle." Her comb scraped against my raw scalp.

I could not bear the pain and the itch for any longer. "You are hurting me (15)" I shouted.

I became what I am today at the age of twelve. It was a frigid overcast day in the winter of 1975. I remember the precise moment, crouching behind a crumbling mud wall, peeking into the alley near the frozen stream. That was a long time ago. Looking back now, I realise I have been peeking into that deserted alley for the last twenty-six years.

One day last summer, my friend Rahim Khan called from Pakistan. He asked me to see him. Standing in the kitchen with the receiver to my ear, I knew it was not just Rahim Khan on the line. It was my past of unatoned sins. After I had hung up, I went for a walk along the lake.

The early-afternoon sun sparkled on the water where dozens of miniature boats sailed, propelled by a crisp breeze. Then, I glanced up and saw a pair of kites soaring in the sky. Suddenly, Hassan's voice whispered in my head, "For you, a thousand times over."

Read the passage carefully and answer questions 26 to 30.

Undoubtedly, Ranga physically dwelt in the town but his thoughts were always centred around his home in the village. There, his daughter was growing up under the care of his rather difficult wife. He managed to send home some money every month for their maintenance, particularly to meet the expenses of his daughter's schooling. He was proud that his daughter went to a school, the very first member of his family to take a step in that direction. His wife, however, did not favour the idea, convinced as she was that a girl was meant to make herself useful at home, marry and bear children. However, Ranga rejected this philosophy, especially after the schoolmaster had told him, "Your child is very intelligent. You must see that she studies well and send her to the mission school later."

Originally, Ranga had set up his grinding wheel next to the village blacksmith under the big tamarind tree where peasants from the surrounding areas, bringing in their tools and implements for repairs, congregated all day. One or other in the crowd would get an idea to hone his scythe, shears or weeding blade when he noticed Ranga and his grinding wheel. However, the blacksmith was greedy, claiming a portion of every dollar that Ranga earned and kept watch on the number of customers Ranga got each day. They quarrelled when the time came to settle the accounts and he also frequently demanded a drink at the tavern across the road. This meant that Ranga would have to drink too and face his wife's tantrum when he reached home. Once, he took a bottle home and coaxed her to taste it but she retched at the smell of it and knocked the bottle violently out of his hand.

Since then, Ranga decided to avoid the blacksmith and try his luck as a travelling grinder. Carrying his grinding gear, he left home early one morning after a simple breakfast. After giving up his association with the blacksmith, he noticed an improvement in his wife's temper. Until one day, when he emptied his day's collection into his wife's lap and she snapped, "Only two dollars! Didn't you go to the weekly market?"

At this, Ranga felt upset and let out such a deafening yell that she jumped and cried, "Are you crazy? What has come over you?"

For each question from 26 to 30, four options are given. One of them is the correct answer. Mark your choice (1, 2, 3 or 4). Shade the correct oval (1, 2, 3 or 4) on the Optical Answer Sheet. (5 mark)

26. Currently, Ranga is _____

- (1) living on his own in the town
- (2) drinking with the blacksmith at the tavern
- (3) calling out to potential customers at the market
- (4) sitting with the other peasants under the tamarind tree

27. Ranga was more determined to see his daughter through school after _____

- (1) sending money home for her expenses
- (2) hearing the schoolmaster's comments of his daughter
- (3) his daughter made history by being the first to go to school
- (4) winning the argument with his wife regarding the importance of education

28. The blacksmith agreed to allow Ranga to set up stall under the tamarind tree with him _____

- (1) because he welcomed his company
- (2) as he saw him as another customer
- (3) in order to get free drinks at the tavern
- (4) to tap on his expertise to attract more peasants with their tools

29. Ranga's "deafening yell" (line 25) reflects that he was _____

- ~~(1)~~ tired of his wife's frequent complaints
- ~~(2)~~ frustrated by the need to avoid the blacksmith
- ~~(3)~~ shocked by the change in his wife's behaviour
- ~~(4)~~ upset by his wife's suggestions of his lack of trying

30. The main idea of this passage is Ranga _____

- (1) believed strongly in the value of education
- (2) did not have a good day at the weekly market
- (3) stopped befriending the blacksmith to please his wife
- (4) had to go through many trials and tribulations to support his family

He turned towards the black interior of the shed and stepped into the (41)
cool, musty dimness, momenterály blinded. He stood perfectly still, waiting, (42)
listening. He heard the soft pad of feet, the dry rustle of straw, the ratel of a (43)
chain. A heavy body brushes against him, almost upsetting him. The next moment, the paper bag was almost ripped from his hand.

(44)
His explored hand touched coarse fur, a broad head, a pair of stubby (45)
tulip-shaped ears. When his eyes became akustommed to the gloom, he made out the great blocky shape of the bear. He put both his arms around its (46)
huge neck, and murmuring, "I sure am glad to see you, Ben."

Ben padded to the open doorway. It was a warm day, and sky and land (47)
were so bright as a new belt buckle. Ben blinked his little eyes at the bright sunlight. He swung his big head right and left as his deliket nostrils eagerly (49)
(48)
sampling the fresh spring air. Ben was not yet a full-grown brown bear, but (50)
even so, he was a tremandoes animal with great ropes of muscles rippling sinuously under his golden coat.

I lay shivering on the floor, listening for my sister's voice and glancing around for my mother even as my head throbbed. When I reached up to touch the crown of my head, I felt ridges of broken bones beneath solidified blood. My stomach heaved: it was shattered pieces of my skull against the surface of my brain. It was then that Gustavo broke the sad news to me.

5

Panic and grief exploded in my heart but a lucid, detached voice said, Do not cry. Tears waste salt. You'll need salt to survive. I was astounded. Not cry for my mother, for the greatest loss of my life? I'm stranded, I'm freezing, my sister may be dying, my skull was in pieces. I should not cry? I heard the voice again: Do not cry.

10

"There is more," Gustavo said. "Panchito is dead. Guido too."

Sobs gathered in my throat but before I could surrender, the voice spoke once more: They are gone. Look forward. Think clearly. You will survive.

I now had an urgent desire to reach my sister. I rolled onto my stomach and started dragging myself on my elbows. When my strength gave out and my head slumped to the floor, someone lifted me.

And there, lying on her back, was Susy. Traces of blood were on her brow; her face had been washed. My friends helped me to lie down beside her and as I wrapped my arms around her, I whispered, "I'm here, Susy. It's Nando."

She turned and looked at me with her caramel-coloured eyes but her gaze was so unfocused that I could not be sure she knew it was me. I wrapped myself around her to protect her from the cold and lay with her for hours: ~~in the chaos of~~ that broken plane, stranded in the Andes, there was nothing else I could do. I thought of my father's old advice to me: "Be strong, Nando. Be smart. Make your own luck. Take care of the people you love."

I told Susy, "Don't worry. They will find us. They will bring us home."

In those early days, all of us believed that rescue was our only chance of survival. We had to believe it. As the afternoon wore on, the frigid air took on an even sharper edge. Soon the darkness was absolute and the cold closed in on us like the jaws of a vice. I suffered through the night, frozen to the core. When I felt I could not stand it any longer, I drew Susy closer. The thought that I was comforting her kept me sane.

30

Five days later, on our eighth day in the mountain, I was lying with my arms around my sister when I saw the worried look fade from her face. Her breathing became shallow until I could hear no more. My chest heaved with sobs. But I did not cry. Tears waste salt. I made a silent vow to my father whom I knew was waiting for me. I will struggle. I will come home.
