Amanda lay in bed and cried. She could not help it. The clock had struck ten, but she was still wide awake. She was thinking of her parents and classmates. "They are probably at home watching television and here I am, all by myself," she thought sadly. To make matters worse, her broken leg was throbbing with pain.

Amanda looked around the large and airy hospital ward. All the patients, except her, were fast asleep. It was the first time she had ever been warded in a hospital and the place was so quiet that she felt afraid.

"Hello, Amanda. Feeling scared? Don't worry. I'm here to take care of you." Amanda looked up and saw a lady in white smiling down at her. She was Nurse Wong, the only adult in the ward. Amanda dried her tears and smiled weakly at her.

"That's better, Amanda. I'm sure that after a good night's rest, you'll be feeling much better in the morning." Nurse Wong's voice was so soothing that Amanda was already feeling better.

Nurse Wong gave Amanda a tablet and some water. The pain in her leg was easing a little. Nurse Wong sat beside her and waited until she fell asleep before checking on the other patients.

That night, Amanda slept well. She knew that the kind lady in white was there to watch over her, and she had nothing to fear.

21. Amanda could not sleep because _____

Section F: Comprehension Open-End (5 x 2 marks)

Read the passage carefully and answer the following questions in complete sentences.

"I've never heard of a crow that is afraid to fly," the mouse exclaimed in shock.

"He's not afraid to fly. Shay is afraid of heights," the butterfly added.

The animals in the valley gathered around the lake, sipping water from it. Shay sighed and joined them for a drink.

Mouse asked, "Shay, why are you afraid of heights? Why don't you fly like all the other crows?"

Shay hung his head low. "I don't want to talk about it," he whispered and walked away.

"We've got to help Shay get over his fear of heights," the bumblebee said. "It is just not normal."

"I have an idea," said the raccoon. "I'll climb to the top of the apple tree and pretend that I'm stuck. I want all of you to ignore my calls and Shay will have no choice but to rescue me." The raccoon then climbed up the tree as high as he could. He waited for Shay to walk past. "Help me! Help me! I'm stuck in the tree!"

All the other animals pretended not to hear the raccoon. "Help me, Shay. Fly up here and rescue me." The raccoon shouted down to him.

Shay shook his head back and forth and said, "I can't help you. I'm afraid of heights. Sorry." He walked away.

"Shay doesn't like heights and he doesn't want to fly, so why don't we just let him be who he is?" the mouse sighed.

"He's a crow that walks," the rabbit said.

"Yes, he is a crow that walks," said the mouse, "but that's just who Shay is."

Never again did they force Shay to fly. They accepted him for who he was. Shay walked on air for the rest of the day.
