Read the passage carefully and answer the questions that follow.

It was a bright sunny morning. Old Pak was on a cart loaded with carrots. A bull was pulling the cart and moving slowly down the path. Soon they came to a creaky old bridge.

"Careful," said Old Pak to his bull. "Remember, Gopal's bull had made a hole in that bridge last week. We have to cross that bridge slowly. Go gently, now." Cautiously, as though the bull understood every word, it pulled the cart across the bridge. "Thank goodness, we could cross that bridge safely. Otherwise, we could not get to the market to sell these carrots," remarked Old Pak.

As Old Pak continued his journey, he saw Gopal's cart ahead. Soon, Old Pak overtook Gopal. Gopal's cart was loaded three times its height with wood. "Some day your bull will drop dead carrying a load like that!" shouted Old Pak to Gopal. "Not only that. The old bridge won't hold you."

"My bull is fine! Yours will eat up all your carrots! Wait till you see what I can trade my wood with. Rocks! I will have rock walls for my house," Gopal retorted.

Old Pak chuckled at Gopal's reply. He felt sorry for Gopal's bull. It was all skin and bone.

By noon, Old Pak had not sold all his carrots. With the money he had earned that day, he bought some wheat and sugar. He then made his way home. Old Pak fell asleep while his bull faithfully pulled his cart. When Old Pak woke up, he discovered that his bull had stood still before a huge hole on the floor of the old bridge. Old Pak looked through the hole to the stream below. He saw the back of a half-submerged bull in the stream and a badly damaged cart next to it. Suddenly, Old Pak felt a tap on his shoulder. Behind him was Gopal!

"That's my cart loaded with rocks and my poor bull," sighed Gopal. Gopal would have been dead if he had not jumped off his cart in time. Old Pak comforted Gopal and they made their way home together.

(Adapted from The Bullock by Constance M. McCullough)
