Section F – Comprehension MCQ (5 x 1 mark)

Read the passage below and answer questions 26 to 30.

At one time people did not think too badly of homeless wanderers, believing that they led carefree lives. Home might be a park bench or an empty carriage on a train heading for some unknown place. It was felt that they chose the life they wanted. Hence it was easy to ignore them.

Today, however, homeless people are not easy to ignore. Home can be 5 just about anywhere – abandoned buildings, shelters, bus and railway stations, subways and city streets. They are everywhere – in large and small cities all over the world. Authorities over the world can barely cope with the sheer numbers of people living on the streets. This situation is worse in large cities.

It is impossible to find out the exact number of homeless people. 10 Although there are people who have been living on the streets for years, there are some who are temporarily without a home because of a fire or a hurricane. Sometimes, people are forced out of their homes because they cannot pay the rent.

How do people get into such a pathetic state? Many of the homeless have lost their jobs or have problems with drugs and alcohol. As a result, they are too 15 poor to afford housing. Some are mentally ill, discharged from hospitals with nowhere to go as their families have rejected them. ^{There} They are yet others who moved onto the streets. For them, the streets are havens compared to the derelict conditions of their homes.

There have been many suggestions about how to tackle this social 20 problem. While governments can put more money into building low-cost housing, private organisations should also do their part. They can help to provide homes for the needy and people with social problems, and job training to help the jobless to acquire new skills and find work. Only when the government and private organisations work together can the problem of homelessness be tackled successfully. 25

Section K – Comprehension (10 x 2 marks)

Read the passage below and answer questions 71 to 80.

It was at least two months before Christmas when my nine-year-old daughter, Rose, told her father and me that she wanted a new bicycle. Her old Barbie bicycle just couldn't cut it. It was too babyish, and besides, it needed new tyres.

As Christmas drew nearer, her desire for a new bicycle seemed to fade – or so we thought, as she didn't mention it again. Merrily, we started purchasing the latest rage – Baby-Sitter's Club dolls – and beautiful story books, a doll house, a holiday dress and toys. Then, much to our surprise, on December 23rd, she proudly announced that she "really wanted a bike more than anything else."

Now, we didn't know what to do. It was just too late, what with all the details of preparing Christmas dinner and buying last minute gifts, to take time to select the 'right bike' for our little girl. So here we were – on Christmas Eve around 9 p.m., having just returned from a wonderful party, contemplating our evening ahead – hours of wrapping children's presents, parents' presents, a brother's presents and friends' presents. With Rose and her six-year-old brother, Dylan, nestled snugly in their beds, we could think only of the bicycle, the guilt and the idea that we were parents who would disappoint their child.

That was when my husband, Ron, was inspired. "What if I make a little bicycle out of clay and write a note that she could trade the clay model in for a real bike?" The theory, of course, being that since this is a high-ticket item and she is "such a big girl", it would be much better for her to pick it out herself. So he spent the next five hours painstakingly working with clay to create a miniature bicycle.

On Christmas morning, we were so excited for Rose to open the little heart shaped package with the beautiful red and white clay bike and the note. Finally, she opened the package and read the note aloud.

She looked at me and then Ron and said, "So, does this mean that I can trade in this bike that Daddy made for me for a real one?"

Beaming, I replied, "Yes."

Rose had tears in her eyes when she replied, "I could never trade in this beautiful bicycle that Daddy made me. I'd rather keep this than get a real bike."

At that moment, my husband and I would have moved heaven and earth to buy her every bicycle on the planet!
